Fly Fishing

Fly fishing is very different than fishing with a lure or worm type baits. The fly fisherman uses a artificial fly consisting of bites of feathers, foam, hide, fur, yarn, and other materials to be tied on to a hook that make it appealing to the type of fish you are catching. Every fly fisherman has his own type of flies he likes to use some purchase them and then some of us like to tie our own. Fly tying is more of an art with basic training which most people can learn over a short period of time.

The tip of your rod should be in the four o' clock position with 20 feet (6 meters) of line extended beyond your rod's tip. Trap the line between the rod handle and your index finger. To begin the back cast, bend your elbow, raise your forearm and move the rod tip from four o'clock to eleven thirty and lift the line from the water. Pause for a moment at this point to allow the line to extend behind you before casting the rod forward. Allow the rod to follow through as the line extends to its full length in front of you. Then continue to work the line in this manner. A fish strikes. The fight is on and you successfully land the fish. This is fly casting.

Fly fishing is an old method of angling. It was primarily developed to catch trout and salmon. Today, it is still used to fish these species, but is also used to catch bass, carp, pike and a wide range of saltwater fish. The difference between casting and fly fishing is that in casting you use the weight of your bait, sinker and bobber to propel your cast. In fly fishing, the weight of the line propels your line forward and puts your fly into position. The fly cannot do this, as it is essentially weightless. The goal in fly fishing is to present the fly gently and to always be in control of it.

Top 5 Fly Fishing Vacation Destinations

Fly fishing is one of the most popular forms of angling on the planet. It is far superior in the way of skills that are required and that means that you will be having a grand time no matter what. A fly fishing vacation is not for everyone. There is something special about this type of thing that not everyone will enjoy. Fly fishing requires so much more that many people do not find it enjoyable to say the least. That is why there are not a lot of top locations that are specific to fly fishing but there are some and that means a lot of action for the few that will make the trip.

Madison Valley River provides a great place for a fly fishing vacation. There are several cabins that are allocated only for the fly fishing parties that come in. The fishing is well above the bar. The trout come running down the river at certain times of the year and you can catch your limit within a few hours time.

Yellowstone River makes the best of a fly fishing vacation. This area is one of the best when it comes to fly fishing and people from all over the world fly in for that reason. There is only walking or boating access to the fly fishing vacation areas so that means that you can have a quiet and exciting vacation without all the hassles of the more crowded areas.

South Fork Snake River is a wonderful spot for the fly fishing vacation that you are planning. The main problem is the fact that so many know about it and it can be hard for you to get a spot. The reservations are taken a year ahead of time and they are limited to one week of fishing. This is not a problem because there is some serious action in this area and catching your limit is more than easy.

Henry's Lake provides all the best in fly fishing action. The fish are large in this area so prepare for a fight when one is hooked. There is more than enough room to stay and you can have a cabin for up to one month. Be careful though as the license costs are on the rise in this state.

Big Hole lake is probably one of the largest areas to take a fly fishing vacation. There is enough room for a large amount of people and that means that it can get a bit crowded if you go at the wrong time of the year. Early spring is best and offers some great action.

Understanding Fly Fishing Targets On Flowing Water

When it comes to fly fishing, the jargon can get a bit overwhelming if you let it. Here's the plain English scoop on some common terms used.

Understanding Fly Fishing Targets On Flowing Water

Fly fishing is many things to many people. For some, it is a zen like way to interact with nature. For others, it is test of skill in the act of competing with tricky little fish. For yet others, it is a ballet of artistic movements and techniques to obtain the perfect cast for the perfect fly placement that produces the perfect catch. For most, it is just good, clean fun. Whatever your preference, fly fishing has a definite language you will need to learn.

Traditionally, fly fishing takes place on flowing water such as a river or stream. There are variations for lake or ocean destinations, but they represent a minority. Given this fact, following is an explanation of some of the terms associated with traditional fly fishing.

A “riffle” is an area with fast moving water broken up over some solid structure, most often rocks. A rifle can be an excellent location to cast for a number of reasons. The riffle tends to be an area where insects congregate. Where there are insects, there are fish. In particular, try to cast to areas just downstream of blockages as your catch should be residing in such locations.

A “pool” is an area where fast flowing water enters a deeper pool of water. Often found just after riffles, a pool offers little in the way of prospecting in the interior. It does, however, offer excellent prospects in the areas where water flows in. More than a few species of fish feed at such locations as the water flowing into the pool brings food and nutrients with it.

“Dead water” refers to an area where there is little or no current. This tends to occur in odd geographic areas, large rivers or areas with flow problems. Dead water is rarely a good place to fish, so avoid it like the plague.

Although not a term per se, vegetation that grows out into the water and shady shoreline locations is often excellent places to fish. These locations offer the combination of shade and nutrients, which are popular with fish. When referring to shade, it is important to understand that fish are not generally worried about sunburns. Instead, they are worried about dive bombing birds such as Osprey. A fish that cruises along the top of a pool of water in direct sunlight tends to have a very short life span.

Obviously, the above represents a small sampling of terminology related to rivers and moving areas. Nonetheless, you will at least know why so many anglers talk about riffles.

Types Of Fly Fishing

There are two types of fly fishing - dry and wet. Wet flies are fished beneath the water surface and are divided into several types, including live wet flies, lures and nymphs. Dry flies float on the water surface and are coated with a substance called, 'floatant' to make this possible.

If you are interested in fly fishing and can't decide which equipment you need to have a positive fishing experience, ask an experienced angler for help. This can be a family member, friend, someone from the local angler's club or a staff member of the local fly fishing shop. Fly fishing is not as hard to learn as it appears to be. Have fun and enjoy that big catch.

The best way to enjoy your catch is to take the time to enjoy the many wonders that the fishing experience offers. No matter what that first adventure turns out to be, you can make it amazing by spending some time learning the skills from an experienced fisherman.

Fly Fishing For Fun

Fly fishing is very different than fishing with a lure or worm type baits. The fly fisherman uses a artificial fly consisting of bites of feathers, foam, hide, fur, yarn, and other materials to be tied on to a hook that make it appealing to the type of fish you are catching. Every fly fisherman has his own type of flies he likes to use some purchase them and then some of us like to tie our own. Fly tying is more of an art with basic training which most people can learn over a short period of time.

Dry fly fishing is the best classic form of fishing. The artificial fly is cast so that it floats on the surface of the water. As the fly passes over the fish it will rise to the surface and strike or take the fly.

With the fly rod you will attempt to stop the fish from spitting out the fly and get it tired enough so you can land it in your net. With fly fishing you will see all the action as you cast the fly and play the fish for a strike. The fly is very visible on the surface to the fish. You will see the fish take the fly on the surface however trout and other fish tend to feed under water so if you see the fish rising to the surface it is time to use a dry fly.

Wet flies will sink under the surface of the water and may be passed in front of the fish thereby causing the fish to strike at the fly,

Nymph fishing is very popular after the flies lay eggs on lakes or in streams and they hatch out as nymphs. As the nymphs make their way to the surface the fish will take them. When they get to the surface they will hatch into a fly.

When nymph fishing the imitation nymphs you use will be weighted to stay below the surface of the water. This will be far more of a challenge for you as the action all takes place under the surface of the water and you will not be able to see if a fish is about to strike.

Most fish can be caught on a fly but the most common are trout, salmon, char, and most game fish. In most areas the trout are the most popular and you will find them feeding mostly on small insects in shallow water. If you live on the coast you find salmon fishing with a fly rod a very rewarding challenge. Hooking a 30 or 40 pound salmon on a fly rod will give you a work out running up and down the beach trying to play the fish out to land it .

The fly fishing sport has gained ever increasing popularity over the years. Most will agree it just not about catching the fish but in the delivery of the fly and the skill and knowledge in the pursuit. <http://tinyurl.com/pgqjj>

Some fly fisherman regard fly fishing as the holy grail of fishing. It is more relaxing and some say a better past time than golf. The sport of fly fishing sees people from all walks of life. Some say it is more environmentally friends than the other type of fishing because it does less harm to the fish then other styles of fishing.

The art of fly fishing will get in to your blood and you will peruse the quite of the streams or the solitude of the ocean beaches to capture you prey. Most anglers will catch and release if they are fly fishing.

Fly Fishing – 5 Main Types Of Lure

Agreed that there are a score of flies out there and each must have been used at some point or the other by every fly fisherman. However, all the flies fall into 5 main categories of fly fishing lure. These are:

1. Dry Flies
2. Wet Flies
3. Nymphs
4. Streamers/Buck tails and
5. Terrestrials

The main purpose of the fly, or lure, is to make it look like a particular insect the fish is known to like.

A Dry fly is an imitation of any kind of insect that floats on the water. Remember the fish are not fools and are very alert about their environment. They know what type of insects live on or in the water that they live in and they also know how the water currents and the wind make the insect move. So, it is not easy to fool the fish. A characteristic of fly fishing is that the angler will move the fly just like it were a live insect, so if an angler is moving a dry fly against the current a fish in the water will never even give it a second thought. Now will that not be a waste of time? This is because the fish recognizes the fly as something very familiar but because it is not acting like an insect the fish will ignore it as a foreign body in the water.

A wet fly is made to behave like a drowning insect the fish recognizes. A wet fly is dropped below the surface of the water unlike dry fly that is allowed to float on the surface. Wet fly fishing is a fishing technique that dates back to the Macedonian people of the 2nd century and is a very effective form of fishing.

The nymph is a lure that is becoming more popular than the wet fly. This is because a lot of fisherman are of the belief that the fish looks at a wet fly as a nymph. A nymph also imitates a drowning insect and lures the fish to eat it. This is a lure that, like the wet fly, is also lowered just below the surface of the water and this technique is fast assuming the name 'nymphing'.

How To Become A Fly Fishing Pro!

Streamers are lure that get their name from the live food that already exist in the stream. These flies do not resemble or try to imitate any part of the insect world. However they do look like the live food the fish like to eat in the streams. Buck tails are lure that are tied with hair while Streamers are tied with feathers.

Apart from the five categories of flies used in fly fishing they may be others in use as this is a sport that every one tries to experiment with and come up with the best technique and lure to get the best trophy for their collection. If you discover a certain type of fly for fishing you should share your discovery online with your fellow fly fishermen.

The Etiquette Of Fly Fishing A Stream

Fly fishing is a water sport that can be enjoyed by everyone. People as young as 14 years have taken to the sport and adults as old as 80 have too. Fly fishing in a stream can be a gentle sport and this gentleness should be reflected in the way we fish for game in the rivers and streams.

Fly fishing etiquette is nothing but common sense that should prevail while fishing in a stream. Nevertheless there are things many young and old fishermen unfortunately forget during a fly fishing session. This etiquette we refer to is with regards to the other fly fishermen in the area.

Remember that there are other people fishing the same waters that you are. The first rule is to remember that it is not good etiquette to fish near another fisherman. There should be at least 20 meters distance between you and anyone else who is fishing, unless the person has consented to you fishing the same waters. It is considered very rude for someone to setup his or her fishing gear near another person already fishing in a place and is getting a lot of bites.

A fisherman will never disturb the waters where another fisher is already fishing. If they notice someone fishing they stop at a reasonable distance so as not to disturb the fish and ruin any chances of a good catch. It is ok to stand and watch the fisher fishing for a while, you never know what you might learn.

People who have a common interest in a sport such as fly fishing seem to have an instant bonding when they meet. It pays to be friendly to another fly fisherman you may happen to meet along the stream on one of your fishing trips. Invariably there is an exchange of advice and mostly it leads to something you learn. It is best to enter into a friendly conversation, you might just find out what fly fishing techniques are working for the fisher that particular day. Many people have been introduced to the sport of fly fishing just by talking to others about the sport. So if you meet someone at a fishing expedition exchange a few pleasantries, you never know who you could introduce to your favorite sport.

Now the most important thing about fly fishing etiquette, the environment, remember that the water and the surroundings are the home of the fish and a place where other people visit to partake in a sport you all have learnt to love. It will only be good etiquette to keep the place clean. Clean the surrounding when you leave the spot after a fishing trip. Try to leave it cleaner than you found it. Remember it only takes a few minutes to cleanup after you. This will keep the fishing spots looking beautiful and inviting for everyone.

Salt Water Fly Fishing

The thrill and excitement that was the characteristic of freshwater bodies in days of yore has now extended to salt water fish. Since the past half century fly fishing has become somewhat of an elitist sport and has spread through Europe and the Americas. Many of the sports men choose to wear their hip length waders and fish from near the river banks or the shores of the lakes while some prefer to go out in boats with their fly fishing equipment.

When it comes to saltwater fishing the angler has two choices. One is to seek a place on an island or near a densely vegetated part of the sea shore or go out in a boat to a place he or she knows big game is lurking. When it comes to salt water fly fishing one can be assured the prey they seek will be enormous. And given that water covers over 75% of the earth there is no dearth of saltwater fish to angle or the number of places to fish.

So far as salt water fishing is concerned, it is important to study and understand the effect the tides have on the fish. The temperature and the clarity of the water are affected by the tides. These are two of the important factors to be considered when fly fishing. Let us take an example. Fly fishing in an inland lagoon or a bay means the tides need to be taken in to consideration, when the tide is draining out from the lagoon or bay the larger fish will be feeding on the tiny fish that have been swept into the water body by the tide. Try your luck fishing away from the mouth of the creek, you will be pleasantly surprised.

A little knowledge of geography will tell you that tides rise and fall once every 12 hours. Since salt water fly fishing is done in shallow waters (if you want relatively smaller fish) you know that fishing during the times when the tides have ebbed. This is the time the fish will be feeding among the vegetation and the smaller fish that swim near the surface.

Most of the salt water fisherman prefer to fly fish in the shallow waters near the shore, or from a boat a little way out in the ocean where bigger game offer more excitement. This is known as 'inshore fishing'. The game that can be pursued during 'inshore fishing' include striped bass, bluefish, flounder, channel bass, bonito and barracuda among many others.

How To Become A Fly Fishing Pro!

The other form of saltwater fly fishing is deep water fishing. This is an even more challenging form of fly fishing. Typically deep water fly fishing is pursued in waters that are deeper than 12 feet. Fly fishers usually fish in deep salt waters from boats that can range in length from 50 feet to 10 feet, this is fast gaining popularity among the fly fisher community all over the world.

History Of Fly Fishing

The roman traveler and historian Claudius Aelianus had recorded Macedonian fishermen using the technique of fly fishing during the 2nd century. However, historians believe that this technique was around much before that and it was just named by the Roman. The technique of using flies as lures to catch certain types of fish is what gives this technique its name.

Fly fishing is a technique of fishing that needs a six foot fishing pole and a six foot long fishing line with a fly at the end of the line on a hook. It is basically the fly at the end of the line that gives this technique its name. The Macedonian fishermen were, according to the Roman, very successful at this type of fishing.

The Fly

Fishermen usually make an artificial fly out of a hook some clay and the wings of a flying insect. In modern times this men have learned to make much more sophisticated flies for their sport. The flies today can be from the most simple to the mechanical lures. Some fishermen have made flies out of the synthetic materials such as colored wool and plastic. The wings of the fly, made from colored wool or plastic lures the fish while the way it is constructed allows the fly to spin in the water while the angler pulls in the reel.

The fish mistake the spinning fly for a live insect and bite. Then there are the other mechanical flies that are more sophisticated. These can be wound up to fly around in the water in a random manner and make a buzzing noise. This is very successful in luring any fish in the area for a meal.

The Fishing Rod And Line

Fly fishing rods have come a long way since the discovery of the technique. In the beginning he rods were cut from around the waterfront, then the rods were made more sophisticated with the rod manufacturers slicing the bamboo into four long pieces and then gluing them together over a solid base. This gave the rod a little more spring. Since World War 2 the fly fishing rods are being constructed out of fiber glass. These rods are much more affordable easily available. It is also possible to collapse these fiber glass rods into smaller pieces so that they can be packed away for traveling. The older rods are, however, still available on demand.

How To Become A Fly Fishing Pro!

The line has also undergone a change over the years. At first the fly fishing line was made out of horse's hair, and then with the invention of silk the fishing line was made from silk though the line still needed to be opened and dried from time to time. Then nylon took the place of silk and is still used today.

Though this was a profession in the 2nd century it has become an elite sport over the years. This sport of fly fishing is very popular in Europe and America. People invest very highly in fly fishing equipment including boats and paying highly for fly fishing trips to distant parts of the world.

Fly Fishing Accessories

Fly fishing is a sport that has emerged over the years and has taken on a form of a science and an art. In addition to the right equipment you must have the proper knowledge if you want to be successful in this sport. You are expected to have the proper outfit that includes all the gear needed for a fly fishing trip. This includes the clothing, foot wear, fishing rod and tackle and most of all the knowledge of the habits of the fish you are angling to catch.

The basic wardrobe of a fly fisherman is the fly fishing vest that contains a lot of pockets that is used for the various tools and tackle an angler needs to catch his trophy fish. A small pocket made out of tanned sheep skin and worn in the front of the vest is a good accessory for keeping those additional flies and hooks. Another good accessory that most fishermen like to keep handy is a spring loaded spool that has a pair of nail clippers hooked at the end. This is handy when you have to cut the line and either remove the catch or let it go.

The fly fishing vest should also have a big pocket at the back where you can tuck in some light rain gear just in case. A small ring at the back of the collar of the vest will come handy to keep the net out of the way.

Fly Boxes should be wisely chosen. These should be small enough to tuck away in one of the pockets. Ideally a fly box should have 2 to 3 chambers to keep the different flies and tackle. The sections in the fly box keep the wet flies and the dry flies separate. Some small vials are also pretty handy to store the wet flies after a catch.

It is important to keep a spare spool complete with reel just in case the one on the rod gets spoilt. You never know when it will and it is best to have one spare handy instead of abandoning a perfectly good fishing trip.

If you are planning a fly fishing trip into a thickly vegetated area such as a swamp you are best advised to keep some insect repellent as well as some rash cream handy with your kit. Insect bites and allergic rashes are common fishing trips.

How To Become A Fly Fishing Pro!

Equally important for the fly fishing kit are sun goggles, gloves, a flash light and small pocket knife and don't forget the first aid kit. Last but not the least is the wading boots. These are usually hip length leather or rubber boots. Care must be taken not to wade deeper than the length of the boots for obvious reasons.

With the right accessories, you can have the fishing experience of a lifetime.

Wading In The Water With Healthy Fly Fishing Waders

You may remember getting reprimanded as a kid for leaving your cycle in the backyard overnight or being corrected and punished for forgetting to put your playthings away after you finished using them; well, that is all a part of growing up and a memory that is sure to be common to lots of fishermen too. We mention this here today because of the need for the right equipment for anglers to make that perfect fishing trip more enjoyable – and learning to take care of fishing gear is part of every smart fisherman's safeguard to providing more fun once you've invested in a pair of good quality fly fishing waders that protect you and let you venture into deeper waters to maximize scope of getting a catch! You may recall the disappointment you've felt as a kid on leaving action hero toys on a duty posting outdoors and found them ruined by a local tabby – well, this further emphasizes the importance of looking after your belongings, including your fly fishing waders, after they've serviced you on the last fishing trip – just as you would care and protect your other things.

Care and maintenance of your expensive or budget fly fishing waders is very crucial to making the next fishing trip a memorable one – for the right reasons – as nothing is more a kill-joy on an outdoor sports vacation than knowing your equipment is the wrong kind or not up to the adventure! Many a time, even the less costly pair of fly fishing waders can put a dent in your fishing gear budget, as good quality gear doesn't come cheap – even on sales and mark-down prices; learning to take care of them is the only way to ensure you have secured your hundred dollar plus worth for many more fishing trips to come and done the needful by keeping them clean and dry after you've finished using them.

The importance of protecting your fly fishing waders cannot be stressed enough: this is a vital part of any fly fisherman's essential gear and is a shield from sharp rocks, uneven or rough ground conditions besides allowing you to wade into deeper waters while you stay warm and dry – without risking your clothes getting soiled too! Therefore, as long as you are scouting for better fishing holes and need to skim the waters for your catch, you need to depend on a good quality pair of fly fishing waders that assist you in your job; take care not to puncture them, though, as this is hard to mend. If you check for holes in your fly fishing waders when you return from the trip and clean and put them away, you won't have to learn the hard way – as others do – about frustration at ruined gear on the next trip!

How To Become A Fly Fishing Pro!

Experts recommend that just depending on a higher price tag on the fly fishing waders you buy is no way to guarantee how durable they are and therefore it is very important to use them with care and double-check for any faults, tears or leaks when you return from a fishing trip, besides of course, cleaning and drying them before storing them away. Shine a flashlight on the inside of the waders in a darkened area to check for holes or submerge them in water while applying pressure from the outside – you'll know you're in trouble if small water droplets form! Get a patch to mend these punctures ASAP – so your waders are ready and fixed for the next outing.

If you hang up your waders when you return from a trip (for drying thoroughly) and follow the above tips, you can count on many years of service from your waders!

Fly Fishing: A Unique Experience

Fly fishing is a water sport and a very different fishing technique used to catch big game fish. The sport of fishing is also known as 'angling'. Salmon and trout are the popular fish that are sought by anglers of fly fishing. In recent times other species of fish such as Bass, carp and pike have been added to the list of game fish that fly fishermen seek the world over. Fly fishing is believed to have originated in Macedonia in the 2nd century and has now become a popular sport among the European and American fishing community.

Fly fishermen have developed many different lures to attract the game they seek. They have also developed ways to cast and reel in the lure to hook the game that more often than not gets fooled into biting. Some of the lures that are popular among fly fishermen include:

1. Emerges and dry flies, these include stone flies and midgets.
2. Nymphs such as Mayflies and worms.
3. Streamers wet flies such as buggers and leeches.
4. Saltwater flies such as marlin and sail fish
5. Bass and Panfish flies examples are crawfish and eels

It is important to have the proper gear for fly fishing. The most important gear is the fly fishing rod. This piece of equipment may vary from 6 feet in length to 12 feet. The fly rod must match the weight of the fly line. A mismatched fly rod with the wrong weight line will result in improper casting and will ruin the whole exercise. The length of the rod itself is determined by the type of fish the angler is going after the bigger the fish the larger the rod and heavier the line.

The babboo split cane is a popular fly fishing rod. This rod is made by splitting the bamboo into four lengths and gluing it together again over a solid core. Freshwater trout fishing is a fly fishing sport that demands this kind of bamboo rod for success. Synthetic fly fishing rods are making their presence known; however, the die-hard fly angler will stick to the traditional bamboo fly rod and tackle. The line of the bamboo rod is usually made out of horse's hair. This line needs to be regularly dried or it will rot. The silk line used for fly fishing has the same requirement. However, these days the synthetic nylon line is the best suited for fly fishing as the line is stronger and lighter than the traditional fly fishing line.

Tips For Crafting Fly Fishing Lures

Many fishermen find a way to take their hobby of angling to the next level by making a strong personal statement about the bait they use: yes, I'm talking about people that make their own fly fishing baits by hand and make the winter evening a happening one by doing so! Tying your own flying fishing lures is an easy enough task that can be given a personal touch with the freely available kits in the market that allow you to put your stamp on the baits you tie; besides this, you can also design patterns you particularly like or want to be known by as regards the flies you make for hooking those prize catches like bass and trout when warmer months come over you! Thus, those that advocate making your own lures are actually prescribing an interesting and fruitful past time for avid anglers – even newbies can be successful when tying a dry fly fishing bait- it's that easy!

Easy Way to Make Dry Fly Fishing Lures

The best way to make an easy dry fly fishing bait is to put together all the supplies you will require, including a compact grip for holding the hook, a more basic one, a line and perhaps, tiny feathers or coarse deer or elk hair. You can also substitute this animal hair with synthetic fibers you can pick up at sports stores – ask hackle barbs and it should do the trick!

- Put the hook in the grip with its curved end held in a vice-like hold and the stem side facing away; with the forefinger of the opposite hand held along the this shank of the hook, start winding the line over and over again, by gripping it as near the bend as possible. You should ideally be able to see a good portion of the hook peeping through the thread and when you reach the end, change the directing you are wrapping the thread in a cross-over pattern over each loop, so it forms an 'X' pattern. On reaching the first binding of the line, let your finger slip away so the line hangs and other items stay put!
- After measuring the material for the tail, snip off the extras keeping it the same length as the shank measurement with a little extra for tying it to the hook; now's the time to loosely tie the animal hairs or hackle barbs so they are smack against the wings near the middle of the hook shank Next, pull the line tight to the opposite side so the bundle of hair moves towards the top of the hook-bend and fasten this with additional thread-wraps.

- If you want a thicker portion for the body of the bait, 'dubbing' is required: you can do this by twisting thread round the hook shank, giving it a specific shape, taking care to begin winding at the back of the wings and tapering it off at the tail-end.
- Whatever your choice of hackle tips, trim them to your chosen length (same as shaft of the hook) and keeping an angle from middle of feather shaft to side of the hook, start working downwards so you end up wrapping up the front of it. Keep feather straight and wind more till you can push it as upright as possible; wrap at the back of the feather too so the wings stand straight up as well. Do the same on the opposite side so wings are carefully spread-out.
- If you like more decorations, place more hackle feathers to the lure-front and remember, the finer your feathers in the lure, the further it will fly across – so 3 to 5 wrap-arounds should serve you well!
- To finish off, wind the line a few times so the bobbin falls through the loop, then pull tight to secure the fly you are tying – fastening securely will ensure it does not come loose while fishing.

Fly Fishing For Largemouth Bass

Fly fishing for bass is one of the most exciting fishing sports in the world. This large mouth fish is in all probability the most sought after sporting fish in the world. It may be because of the vast distribution of this fish in all the fresh water bodies that makes this large mouth bass the popular game it is. The large mouth bass attracts anglers to distant places such as Southern Canada, South America and places in between. These places also offer good game in small mouth bass as well though these species are not so widely spread as their large mouth cousins.

It is in the warmer waters that the large mouth grows to great sizes. Let us take an example of the 5 pound bass, which will commonly be found in the north lake waters. However, the southern waters of the lakes are known to produce giants such as the 10 pound bass or perhaps larger fish. Water temperature is important for the size of the fish in all kinds of fishing sport.

The season following spawning is considered the best time for bass fishing. The temperature of the water decides when the fish are going to spawn and the large mouth bass are known to spawn when the temperature is below or up to 6- degrees. The female bass are known to lay eggs after mid June in Minnesota and the same female will spawn in February if she were in Florida.

When it comes to the feeding habits of the largemouth bass a lot depends on the temperature of the water at the top of the water body. On hot days the bass will feed in the day or the early hours of the morning and lazily swim around till late evening. This is the best time to fish for bass, when they are hungry; else they may just ignore the lure. These large fish can be found in warm waters that are densely vegetated as the fish will find a lot of insects among the water plants and even feed on underwater leaves. This is why they always stay where there is lot of vegetation in the water, a favorite place for bass anglers to lure their game.

Anglers gaming for the largemouth will use bugs and other insects that can be found in places where the Bass is known to feed. Poppers are artificial lure that are made to look like bugs and can skip along the surface of the water when the angler reels it in quick successive sweeps.

This fools the bass into thinking it is a live insect and goes for the lure. Another good lure is the Minnow and even the Woolly worm.

Some fly fishermen have developed a technique of luring the bass with a few tantalizing strokes of the fly over the Bass' resting place. This catches the interest of the bass and makes him go for the bait. This makes the game of fly fishing all the more interesting and exciting.

Beginning At The Beginning, The Fly Fishing Basics

As with all new learning activities, be they home-grown ones like painting a house or picking up car-driving skills, the matter of expertise is only addressed by understanding the need for learning, raising the bar on skill levels and improving knowledge base by maximizing potential for scope of the activity. Then, how can fly fishing basics be any different? And so, we take a look at the fundamentals of this interesting and specialized sport that makes one take to water in a need to combine love of the outdoors with a thrilling past-time that is rewarding – if you happen to be a trophy fish collector or eater. As with learning car-driving, the student needs to know which gears to operate for a specific function, similarly, with learning fly fishing basics will ensure you know which buttons (or bait) to push to get the right results; like painting a house requires smoothly covering one then another coat instead of sloppily splashing color all about, fly fishing has certain techniques and equipment that need to be invested in, for achieving the desired results of reeling a good catch. It is an evenly balanced task that spreads out skill levels, with approaches and fishing gear and like in car-driving, the hobbyist needs to be aware of how to steer towards success.

Beginning with the most common myth that all fly fishing basics requires of one is to simply tie a hook onto the end of a pole and stick the thing in waters, waiting patiently for a bite, we address these misconceptions one by one: shoestrings as fishing lines do not work, period! Huckleberry Finn was another matter altogether besides being fictional and this method does not hold many rewards for real-time fisherman today, so learning the fundamentals of fly-fishing is crucial for keen anglers who want to raise their skill levels and catch fish too!

The basics of fly fishing will teach one to become a better fisherman and beginning with the most important tenet – letting the bait follow the natural pattern of a fly skimming the waters – we move to easier, effective and fundamental concepts of fly fishing success! At times, a fly may jump from one spot to another in a stream – so if you simply become a bystander after casting your line and not following this pattern of movement, you are unlikely to get a bite on your line. On the other hand, you can keep frustration and frayed tempers at bay by imitating your line casting spin in a manner similar to the natural movement of a fly!

Some fisherman or hobbyists may find learning the fly fishing basics a boring or strenuous task but it's not always the case: you can liven up the tutorial by getting expert help that won't lull you to sleep. For instance, one great and interesting way to go about learning fly fishing basics is by renting or buying a tape on the topic or even hiring a fishing guide for a day; tagging along with a more experienced fishing buddy makes learning the fundamentals more enjoyable too! You can also easily pick up how-to-guides at local sports fishing stores and click online fro web sites offering free info and demos on the art of fly-fishing – these are cheap and effective ways to hold onto a love for life and fishing lines!

Top US Fly Fishing Spots

Millions of individuals have discovered the joys and excitement of fly fishing the world over and millions are joining this popular water sport every year. Fly fishing has become a household word with the average American who plans at least two fly fishing trips in a year to his favorite fly fishing spot, of which the US has many to offer.

The US has many fly fishing spots that are known to offer the best fly fishing opportunities anywhere. These include Catskill mountain fly fishing zones in New York. It was during the later half of the 19th century that anglers decided to try their skill at crafting artificial baits of various kinds to catch the elusive game in the Catskill waters of the state. The anglers made their flies to look like the real things. The flies were wet as well as dry flies and were constructed out of wool or colored feathers tied around solid bases. These reproduced the natural movement of the live insects they were imitating and were a huge success.

Catskill has many rivers good for fly fishing however, the Beverkill river is the most popular of the lot with a wide variety of fly fishing game to offer. Even the most amateur fly anglers are destined to return with a catch from these waters. Apart from this there are also the West branch of the Delaware and the Willowemoc that are growing in popularity.

Another very popular fly fishing spot in the US is the Jackson's Hole in Wyoming. This area offers anglers an unlimited variety of fish and attracts fishers from all over the world. If you find that due to some quirk of fate the whole world has turned up at Jackson's hole to fish you could explore the periphery of the area such as Snake River and Jackson Lake. These two places are less visited for reasons not known, however the game here is just as exciting. You could get to Jackson's Hole by air as well as by land and you will have so many fly fishing spots to explore that it is almost impossible to visit them all in one visit.

If your game is Rainbow Trout, you should make your way to Henry's Fork on the Snake River. The area, especially in the vicinity of Harriman State Park is known for the water game it offers. You will have a free hand in this unobstructed fishing arena.

Fly Fishing Casts

Knowing to cast is very significant in any kind of fishing. There are several ways one could go about the same. Read on to know the details on casting.

The art of perfect casting is one of the significant skills when fly fishing is concerned. It requires synchronized and gradual movements. It assists in thinking of every movement, be it back cast or the forward cast. There are divisions of three steps. At the outset, it is loading, then the second step is the momentum of projection, and lastly, it is the pause. It takes more than a lot of mere practice to be proficient with this art of casting in the area of fly fishing.

Several natures of casts exist in fly fishing. Among them, the common ones include the false cast, basic cast, reverse and side casts, double haul cast and roll cast.

Basic Cast

The basic cast, in fly fishing is supposed to be the easiest cast. It is just casting the line back, straight and then directly forward. A newcomer into the hobby of fly fishing must master this basic cast before approaching on to several other techniques. Using a line of short length to begin with would be helpful if one is new to the hobby of fly fishing. This would assist you to have enough control about the line especially when you are practicing gentle and short movements.

False cast

The basic cast varies to become a false cast. This again consists of the similar forward and backward movements like the basic cast. It is immediately followed by yet another set of almost the same movements. The line of the Fly essentially travels forwards and backward repeatedly ensuring no touch of the water. Precise timing usually required in fly fishing is built perfect when the false cast is practiced.

Reverse and side casts

When the wind creates the problem, the reverse and side casts are often used. Even when there are obstacles making other casts difficult, these casts are used.

Roll cast

When the fishermen find themselves with their backs to such obstacles like a wall of lush vegetation or some high river bank, the roll cast is used. Often in such circumstances, a basic cast is never possible. A good length of line should be let out in front of you or the best way would be letting the current one take a small distance. The rod would be loaded with the drag of water up on the line. You could then cast ahead without waiting for the execution of the back cast.

Double Haul cast

When this cast is applied in fly fishing, you would be able to cast a longer line than what the basic cast could do. To have this done, you need a faster line speed. Often it requires making larger casting movements, loading rod before the forward cast, and applying more strength. Both the hands of the fisherman should work independently when implementing this cast.

The above mentioned casts of five different natures are the most basic ones. There exist several other varieties of casting which include the parachute cast, the mend cast and the S-Cast.

The most fundamental physical skill required in fly fishing is but the casting. It needs practice just like every other skill. The purpose here is placing the fly precisely where you expect it to be. Delicacy and accuracy in presentation is significant when fly fishing is concerned. Mastering the fundamentals of fly casting initially would make it easier to get to the challenging and difficult casts.

Fly Fishing For Men And Women

Fly fishing would not distinguish between women and men. Women too have shown their talent in this area. Know more about the implementation of this art by different sexes.

Once upon a time, fly fishing was viewed as a manly sport. This could be due in the part to the old elitist status of this sport. The nostalgia too, tends to be in favor of the masculine involvement about fly fishing. Today, fly fishing is appropriately recognized to be a great fishing sport option for both men and women. Essentially, estimates say that there are almost over a million women today, who participate in fly fishing. A few estimates say that women account for about 15-20% of the modern fly fishers.

More interestingly, the initial book about fly fishing, which was ever published, was written by Dame Juliana Berners. She published the book "A Treatyse of Fysshynge wyth an Angle" in the 1496. She is reported being a noblewoman and a nun. Berners certainly would have tied and also fished her artificial flies. Currently, there are such equally influential women who have involved in the environs of fly fishing.

There is a huge and growing market which caters to fly fishing dedicated to women. Few outfitters are dedicated about teaching women how to fly fish. Some outfitters have reported that women, who participate in classes of fly fishing, routinely outnumber the men. Many fishing clubs for ladies are becoming very popular, especially around common fly fishing areas.

Extreme physical strength is essentially not required in case of fish flying. Fly fishing is often more about the speed, style and finesse. Women usually do very well when they fly fish.

The catch-and-release ethos which is common in fly fishing might also appeal to most women. Conventional fishing often closely matches hunting trips with an objective about bringing home food. However, sport fishing activities including fly fishing usually are more about thrill of catch. Great memories and Photos are usually the only things brought home from the trips of fly fishing. The fishes often stay perfectly wherever they are. Most fly fishers also use barbless hooks today to implement the catch-and-release fly fishing easily.

Fly fishing would provide great opportunities for getting out in nature not having to harm and kill anything at all. There are of course women, who fish for supper but most people today, both women and men, enjoy fly fishing due to the opportunity it has provided for getting in touch with the nature. The hobby of fly fishing is quite a relaxing sport; however, it also assists in providing good exercise all at one time. Rhythms of the cast seem to soothe many of them. Such fly fishing also provides the opportunity to see varieties of birdlife and wildlife in the natural environment. Furthermore, the scenic backdrops in most fly fishing areas are again simply wonderful to admire.

Fly fishing groups and clubs provide camaraderie and social networking opportunities. Women and men both enjoy such benefits. Along with the start of the women-only fishing groups and clubs quite many women have found a home with the fly fishing activity.

Manufacturers have also recognized the significant increase about the participation by women. Ladies now buy waders which are essentially designed for them, rather than relying upon the men's' sizes they earlier looked out for. Fly fishing rods too, are being designed keeping women's fly fishing in mind. Women's fly rods are made to be considerably lighter and have much smaller handles. Such improvements are great pieces of news for every woman who enjoys the sport of fly fishing.

Fly fishing is indeed a great sport no matter who you are; man or a woman, adults or children. Everyone could enjoy a day or two out, fly fishing.

Fly Fishing Gear For Women

Fly fishing is one acquired hobby among men and women. You could read this article to know about fly fishing gears among women and if it would really make any difference among men and women when this sport is considered.

Years back it wasn't very common to see a lady trudge all through the water hunting for a few trophy fishes. This is not the case anymore. If you are regularly fishing, you would have noticed most women in the area and field of fishing with their best. Today women are not just greatly involved in the various sports or workforce, but also the hobby of fishing. Most of the fishing companies today, have made a note about the rise in ladies anglers and have started producing several lines which are geared towards the ladies fish lovers. Women too, love the outdoors similar to men. It is a myth about a lady not liking sports such as fishing and being helpless. These are ridiculous statements. Quite many women prefer the fishing and hunting experience, as it gives them the extra time along with their partner.

Among the ladies, Fly-fishing seems to be the most popular fishing methods. You would often find women in their caps and wading boots reeling them in. The gears of Fly fishing range in styles and weights, which becomes extra efficient for the lady fisher. Moreover, instead of borrowing heavy fishing rods from their husbands women today, enjoy the graphite rods which are often lighter. Shorter rods also become very helpful since women usually are not equally tall like their male counterparts. Varied graphite rods could be used for that ultimate experience of fly fishing.

The different rods of fly fishing gear could be bought suit the size of wrist and hand of the fairer sex. The playing field is now equaled since women are able to fish with the similar kind of fly fishing gear which is dedicated to their frame. Men need to know that women today are taking these equality rights! There would be no creepy or nasty crawlers to hook with fly fishing; just with the artificial fly, you set off to get your fish.

Instead of borrowing the oversized shirt from your husband along with a life jacket which is often is two times bigger, there now is a line of accessories available for the ladies. Wading boots, life jackets, shirts, caps, and coveralls for that in-water experience are now available. The Fly fishing gears have changed drastically since several years now and are better now considering that even women are included.

It is true that the usual fly fishing gear when the bait, weights, and along with other incidentals would never change from female to the male angler. The similar artificial flies could be used; however, many of the ladies' are colorfully designed for the incredible eye. Women have the similar equipments to allow them with all the pleasure and relaxation with fly-fishing. As fishing is one of those special hobbies that is always equal to both men and women.

The Most Popular Fly Fishing Spots In The US

Know all about the trout holding lies for a better and much productive fishing experience. Read on to enhance your fishing idea.

As you fly fish for trout it becomes very important to know the different varieties of trout lies. The Trout take up its positions, or lies, depending upon a set of 3 of their fundamental needs when they move in water. The needs are a shelter from constant current with protection from predators plus the requirement of adequate food.

Often swimming against any strong current could be extremely tiring for any trout. Hence, they look for protection from current which becomes is their foremost need. At times, the trout rests behind objects within the water, such as a large rock, that breaks the current. However, at times, the trout stay within holding lies which are close to current. They prefer to be able to grab any food coming their way and dash out towards it.

The second need which the trout has is protection from the predators. They often prefer water which has enough depth, or is rough enough so that they are not seen at the bottom by other predatory birds like the osprey or kingfishers. The trout commonly hold where some type of cover exists to protect them. The cover they look for is like a log or a deep pool. It could be an undercut bank to keep very safe. Sometimes while fly fishing, one might see small and medium sized trout often feeding in shallows quite far from any kind of shelter. It is however quite unusual to see bigger trout feeding in shallows, unless it finds some kind of cover nearby.

Third need, which mostly overrides the previous two, is the basic need for enough food. The trout seems to live by fundamental formula; any food it consumes should give it more energy than they expend having it. Any trout would fight against a heavy and strong current if migrating, hatching, or drifting insects come in the way. For the trout any amount of food which the insects provide justifies that extra energy required to fight any current. Usually, in case of a heavy hatch, trout might hold towards the surface of pool, or a flat, putting them in danger from different predators as they greedily feed.

In fly fishing, to know the three basic requirements of trout which would make them to hold within some types of water, when avoiding others, becomes a significant piece of information. Knowing the main spots of water which meet any of the trout's most basic requirements, would know precisely where the fish is holding.

Holding Lies

Trout have three kinds of holding lies. Holes which are deep and those looking like dark areas within the streambed are commonly used to do away with the current. Best deep holes often have logs or boulders for cover. Then, eddies below points, like the edge of boulders, create slack water pool. Sometimes a reverse current pool is created, holding many trout. At times, upwelling springs come up as lighter spots of the bubbling sand where usually the silt has washed itself away. Quite many trout are brought closer to such springs in summers and winters due to a stable temperature.

A successful fly fishing would depend upon knowing everything possible about habitats and habits of the fishes you are planning to hook.

Fly Fishing Gear- Top 10 pieces

There are several novelty equipments when the hobby of fly fishing is spoken about. From rods to sunglasses, know what the 10 most common ones are.

With an apparently unending array of gear and gadgets, fly fishing seems to be a varied and interesting sport. Most of the available options could be confusing to anyone who is new to Fly fishing. Anyone with a flair for fishing should know the important accessories about it. The 10 common pieces concerning fly fishing gear include a reel, fly fishing rod, line, files, leader, waders, net, clippers, vest and sunglasses.

Fly fishing rod

This rod is one of the mandatory equipments for fly fishing. These rods are usually different when compared to regular and conventional fishing rods and are designed in unique manner. It would allow casting the fly and fly line. Rods today are often constructed using types of graphite compounds. Many of the rods are still structured from bamboo or fiberglass. The Fly rods are usually categorized based upon weights of line they are structured to be used with.

Reels

The Fly fishing reels essentially, are less significant than the rods. Unlike conventional fishing, along with fly fishing one does not reel in the fish. The Fly fishing methods involve stripping the line with free hand. Quite many fly fishing reels actually are of primitive designs and hence not so very expensive. Anglers commonly "palm" the reel for creating the drag, than relying upon internal drag mechanisms within the reel.

Line

The Fly fishing line has been specially designed for such style of fishing. Fly fishing line is considerably heavy compared to traditional fishing line. It is often tapered and designed for floating. Some lines are designed to sink, though. Some anglers attach backer line in between fly fishing line and reel so as to increase the line available.

Leader

The leader is a monofilament, clear line which attaches to the extreme end of fly fishing line. Additionally, the fly is tied to the leader at the end. This leader is further tapered down into a narrow diameter towards the forward end. Leader matches more with the traditional fishing line.

The Flies

They are available in huge assortments of designs and styles. The dry flies are designed so that they float up in the water, nymphs and wet flies are structured for submerging, and few other flies are made to partially submerge. Flies could also be implied as attractive or imitative. Imitative flies are deliberated to imitate or manifest like a specific insect. On the other hand, attractive flies are structured to attract the fish not looking towards any specific natural food source.

The Waders

Waders are optional when you fish in warm water. But a few anglers go fly fishing in cold water streams to find waders enormously essential. Some popular wader styles currently include waders with waterproof lining and neoprene waders. Neoprene waders work very well in the cold water stream and serve in keeping the angler warm. The waders having a waterproof lining prove to be convenient and breathable when one goes hiking flanking a stream.

Net

A net is essential equipment for fly fishing. As fly fishing is often done standing in the waters, it could be not very easy to hunt a fish without good nets. Nets always have a hook attached. This would help the net so that it could be hooked on the anglers' vest or waders. A net is particularly important in cases when the angler is trying to catch and release fishing.

Fishing Vest

As fly fishing is always tried in the water, a fishing vest seems to be a near-essential equipment piece. Vests would allow you in keeping essential gear and tools handy and neat as and when you find its necessity.

Clippers

Clippers are quite useful for clipping the line when you change the flies. You would rarely notice any fly fisherman with no clippers in their pocket or vest.

Sunglasses

Sunglasses are pieces of personal gear which you would never want to forget. They would keep the sun to not reach your eyes and also protect them from stray fishing hooks. Polarized and good quality sunglasses would also assist in a better vision while you are out near the stream. Most anglers would also append a sunscreen and a hat to the catalog of personal gear which is essential.

There are other pieces of gadgets and gear which are available for every fly fisherman. The above mentioned ten items are perhaps among the most essential ones required for a successful and fun outing.

Fly Fishing Rod – Purchasing The Best One

Since fly fishing is unlike the conventional type, one needs to be very aware about purchasing the right rod. Read this article to get hold of the right rod.

It is apparent that fly fishing differs from the regular fishing methods in various ways. Such significant distinctions help in making fly fishing rod to be an obvious fly fishing piece to purchase.

The conventional fishing would use a rod that is equipped with transparent, monofilament and a nearly weightless line for casting a weighted hook within the water. Making use of a weighted and translucent line casting a weightless hook in the water is essentially reversed in Fly fishing. The actions of fly fishing rods are required for being able to cast the fly.

The act of fly fishing is different from conventional fishing in a way that the fly fisherman never puts his rod down. These fishermen cast the whole time they are actually fishing. Such activity makes the decision for buying the perfect rod to very essential. Anglers who fly fish would spend their whole fishing day making casts and having the rod in their hand.

The method of getting in a fish, again, is different in fly fishing. The fishing reel seems to be very important when traditional fishing is concerned. However, it is not quite important for fly fishing. In this type of fishing, the fishermen use a method of stripping the line by hand. Fly fishing reel is commonly used for spare line, like a storage compartment.

The idea about buying the fly fishing rod is indeed a vital decision that would make an impact on the enjoyment you would get from the sport. Most of the modern rods of fly fishing are made from types of graphite compound. However, there are some bamboos rods also designed but are quite expensive when compared to graphite rods. There are, however several alternatives of graphite rods for fly fishing available.

The fly fishing rods are often categorized by weight. A 6-weight rod is also written as 6wt, for instance. Weights of the fly fishing rod you buy would be decided by the place you are intending to fish. Hence, it is significant to use line which goes fine with the weight of the fly fishing rod while you fish. Few rods are developed to be multi-weight fishing rods and could be safely used with various other weights of line.

A general rule while shopping for any fly fishing rod is purchasing an expensive rod that you could afford. The advice is based itself on the comprehension that the fly fishing rod is one of the most vital fly fishing equipment of the fly fishing outfit. One could always upgrade the reel sometime later if decided for acquiring a better reel.

An all time good idea is to visit several shops which sell fly fishing gear prior to making the final choice. Even if one plans the purchase of their fly fishing rod over the internet shop, it would be quite good to essentially handle several other rods before concluding on the final decision. Ensure to remember that while the fly fishermen tend to be bunch of opinionated people, fly fishing rods often are personal choices. If any rod does not find it comfortable within your hands it hardly matters which expert recommends that rod. The choice would also be greatly influenced by the place you intend fishing. For instance, the smaller mountain streams in New England would require a much lighter rod compared to great rivers in Rocky Mountains of Utah.

Fly Fishing Around The World

The history of fly-fishing dates back to nearly 2000 years many cultures around the world have adopted the numerous fly-fishing styles. In recent years, it has become a very popular sport and is being practiced all over the world.

The basics of fly-fishing are simple enough to be learned within a few hours, with the assistance of a guide. Mastering the advanced techniques of the sport is a different ball game altogether and takes many years of dedicated effort. These factors hold the interest of anglers for a lifetime.

Fly-fishing is versatile enough to be adapted to a range of fishing conditions. It does not matter whether you are fishing for trout in a mountain stream in Europe or North America, or even casting a fly for bonefish in the Caribbean. The sport is so flexible that it has become very popular all around the world.

Early records of fly-fishing show that this type of fishing was carried on by the Macedonian anglers. They used six-foot rods and six-foot lines attached to artificial flies comprising of a hook decorated with insect wings and red wool. Very little was written about fly-fishing over the years, but in 1496, The Treatise of Fishing with an Angle was published. Later, in 1653 Isaac Walton wrote 'The Complete Angler' a book that contained many chapters on fly-fishing. All the information in these books points out to the fact that fly-fishing was a well – known fishing sport in England and Scotland. Numerous fly-fishing clubs came up in the 1800s in England and this served to popularize the sport greatly.

The shallow waterways of chalk streams of South England were suitable for dry fly-fishing, due to the growth of weeds just below the water level. North England and Scotland also saw the growth of wet fly-fishing. The anglers in South England were in favor of dry fly-fishing and considered wet fly-fishing a poor distortion of their sport. Even today, the English continue to undertake fly-fishing in the chalk streams, but access to the streams is mostly through private property.

American anglers from the Catskill Mountains in New York began to experiment with the dry-fly designs in the late 1800s. They began to design artificial flies to imitate the insects that trout feed on. Some of the anglers published their fishing adventures, which served to increase the interest in fly-fishing, even more. The American anglers were more open to experimenting in wet-fly fishing, compared to the English.

Interest in fly-fishing has continued to grow in USA and Canada. After the Second World War, fiberglass fly rods were manufactured along with synthetic leaders and line. The sport thus became affordable for people interested in fly-fishing. Dry flies are used for inland fishing in rivers and streams. Coastal fishing is carried on in bays and mostly uses wet flies. Bass anglers have also adapted fly-fishing.

The locations in the southern hemisphere and the Caribbean are popular destinations for saltwater fly-fishing. Anglers travel long distances to fish for tarpon and bonefish. Belize in South America offers both, saltwater and freshwater fly-fishing.

The basic equipment needed to start fly-fishing is becoming very affordable due to the technical improvements in the field. The popularity of the sport is growing around the world. There are plenty of opportunities and the choice of locations for fly-fishing is limitless.

Fly Fishing Catch And Release

Fly-fishing is a very popular sport and due to the massive fishing activity, there is a high fish mortality rate. To avoid the harm that may be caused to nature, many anglers prefer to catch fish and then release them back into the waters. You have to decide whether you want to release all the fish you have caught, or retain some and release the rest back to the waters. Some fly fishing enthusiasts keep a portion of the catch sufficient for consumption and release the rest of it back in the water.

If you wish to practice the catch and release method in fly-fishing, you have to take care to see that you do not injure the fish. Therefore, you need to crush the barb of the hook or use hooks without barbs. Another important point to keep in mind is to keep the fight as short as possible, to prevent the fish from becoming tired. It is better to bring the fish to hand at the first chance, but to leave it under water. Then, use fishing pliers to gently remove the hook while still holding the fish under water.

Sometimes the fish may appear to be very tired to swim away. In such a case, hold the fish under water, around the caudal wrist, the area that is just before the tail. Support the belly of the fish with the other hand. Now, rock the fish back and forth very gently so that water enters the mouth and passes out over the gills. This will help the fish to gain back its energy quickly. As soon as you feel it pull away, release your hold and let it go. This is one of the most rewarding experiences in fly-fishing.

Anglers prefer to keep the larger catch and release the smaller ones. However, the larger fish are more suitable for spawning and if the large fish are released, it will ensure a healthy produce of fish for the future. It is therefore wise to retain the smaller fish for consumption rather than the larger ones.

Another misconception with anglers is that it is quite all right to catch as many fish as possible so long as they are all released back to the waters. However, a number of fish are injured in the process of catch and release fly-fishing. The fish that are caught and released are traumatized in the process and may take time to recover from the ordeal. At times, some fish may even die, increasing the overall mortality rate, even though the angler may have released all his catch.

Fly-fishing can be a very enjoyable sport and a satisfying experience if the catch and release method is practiced. Each release of a fish contributes in a big way towards the nature conservations efforts. It also ensures a supply of fish for the future.

Best Fly Fishing Equipment

Fly-fishing has gained a great popularity over the years as a relaxing sport. The thrill of luring the fish, catching it and having it for lunch or dinner or simply the soothing sounds of running water in a stream have made fly fishing an experience to remember, for the young and the old alike. The fly-fishing experience is complete only if you have the right kind of fishing equipment.

The most important fly-fishing gear is the fishing rod. Fly fishing rods were originally made from flexible but sturdy wood. Later on, bamboo rods were introduced and these became the standard fly-fishing equipment. Bamboo was treated and reinforced to make the best quality fly fishing rods. Presently, due to advanced technology, fly-fishing rods are manufactured from carbon fiber or fiberglass. The fly fishing rod is similar to a normal fishing rod, only it is a little heavier. The weight factor gives a clean and smooth cast to the fishing pole. The smoothness of the cast can vary from pole to pole. A sturdy and heavy fishing pole is an essential part of fly-fishing equipment.

The reels used in fly-fishing are bigger and heavier in comparison to the normal fishing reel. They have a distinctive design and are much more durable compared to the normal fishing poles. Fly fishing rods and reels work together and one must consider their compatibility to each other at the time of purchase. They have to work smoothly together. Finding the suitable reel for the fly fishing rod is of utmost importance.

The third component of the fly-fishing equipment is the replicated fly. Flies are designed to lure the fish and specific types of flies are used to lure a particular species of fish. Hence, the most important aspect of fly-fishing is to consider what type of fish you want to catch. Choosing the right kind of fly is the most important aspect of fly-fishing equipment. The other important item in the fly-fishing attire is a good set of rubber waders that will keep you warm and dry in the cold waters.

Purchasing the right type of fly-fishing equipment is a challenge. However, it adds to the fly-fishing experience and therefore worth the extra effort it takes to procure the best of fly-fishing equipment. With a little practice and the right type of fishing gear, fly-fishing can be a very relaxing and enjoyable sport.

The Art Of Making Dry Flies For Fly-Fishing

Fly fishing is gaining popularity as it is a very interesting sport and there are many people who are participating in this activity. Novices at fly-fishing prefer to purchase all the gear they require including artificial flies. However, once they experience the thrills of the fishing activity, they are hooked on to it. They then think of making their own artificial flies to be continuously involved in the sport during the off-season too. Artificial flies may be a bit tricky to make but some of them are within the ability of most anglers. Some of them are quite easy enough to be made even by children, and this can help to get them interested in the fly-fishing activity.

The earliest use of artificial flies was made by Macedonian anglers, way back in the 2nd century. The Macedonian anglers tied a piece of red wool round the hook. They would tie small feathers to the red wool and make it into an artificial fly. They carried out the fly-fishing quite successfully with the help of these primitive fly-making techniques.

American anglers from the Catskill Mountains in New York began to experiment with the dry-fly designs in the 18th century. They began to design artificial flies to imitate the native insects around the stream that trout feed on. The artificial flies fooled the trout into believing that an edible insect has landed on the water. This discovery encouraged the study of insect hatches to decide which kind of artificial fly would be most successful for fly-fishing at different locations and times.

Artificial flies are comprised of a hook. The hook is disguised to look like a living insect that the targeted fish like to eat; the fish are attracted by the motion or the color used to imitate the live insect. Artificial flies were made by using wool, fur, feathers and other natural materials. However, the artificial flies are now being made using synthetic material. Even though there are a wide variety of synthetic dry flies to choose from, the basic characteristics of fly design have not changed much over the years.

Another new development in the artificial fly design is the barb less hook. Many anglers now practice the catch and release method of fly-fishing wherein the fish that is caught is released back into the water. The barb less hook is easier for the angler to extract from the fish and it ensures that the fish is not injured in the process. There are thousands of designs and styles of artificial flies and a selecting the appropriate one is a challenge for the new anglers.

The materials used to disguise the hook may have changed from natural items to synthetic stuff, over the passage of time. Fur, wool and feathers were the choice of the earlier times. The newer synthetic materials include foam, Mylar, plastic and metals. These synthetic materials are either glued or tied on to the hook in various patterns to attract the fish.

5 Items To Select For Your First Balanced Fly Fishing Outfit

Learn the essential items that make up a fly fishing outfit and also provides tips to how to select the best type suited to your level of expertise in fly fishing.

Selecting the first fly-fishing outfit is the most difficult step once you have decided to participate in fly-fishing. Five essential items make up a fishing outfit. They are the line, rod, leader, reel and the fly. It is essential that each item of the outfit works in an efficient manner and is comfortable for your use. When all these items work together efficiently, the outfit is considered as balanced. Success in fly-fishing depends on the outfit, and therefore it is important to select the right outfit suitable for you. Some basic tips on how to select each of these items is given below:

1. The fly fishing line:

The first item to select is the line. This is because the line weight is the important factor. There are many different types of lines available and it is essential to choose the right one. The line weight designation in the code should match the one on the rod, which will be used. Beginners in fly-fishing can select the double tapered line, which is most commonly used. The various types of lines include weight forward, level line, tapered line and shooting taper. The floating function should be chosen for your first line. A floating line would be suited to your needs for fly-fishing. The line weight would depend on where you will be going to fish.

2. Fly fishing rod:

The three key things to consider while choosing the fly fishing rod are its length, its action and the material it is made up of. Fly-fishing rods are usually made from bamboo, fiberglass, baron or graphite. Fiberglass is the cheapest material used for fishing rods, but it is not convenient in terms of diameter and weight. Bamboo or cane rods are usually handcrafted works of art and are very expensive. These require a lot of care compared to synthetic fly fishing rods. Graphite fly-fishing rods are lightweight and durable and enable the angler to perform any action easily. Therefore, these are the most popular fly fishing rods. Baron fishing rods are the most expensive among the synthetic rods.

3. The fly fishing Reel:

There are 3 types of fishing reels: single action, automatic and multiplier. The most basic of the three is the single action fly reel, which should be selected for a first fly-fishing outfit. Multiplier and automatic fishing reel are not practical for a beginner.

4. Fly leader:

The fly leader is a tiny portion of monofilament line used to fasten the end of the fly line to the fly. The power generated at the time of the cast must be transferred from the end of the fly line to the fly, therefore the correct leader must be chosen. Factors playing a role in the selection of a fly leader are whether the fly leader should be straight or tapered, whether it should be knotless or knotted. The tippet size and the weight of the lead should also be considered.

5. Fishing Fly:

Choosing the fly for your fly fishing outfit depends on factors like the kind of fish you will be targeting and where you will be fishing. It is also a matter of personal preference.

The 5 items of your balanced fly fishing outfit are now chosen. What are you waiting for? Go out there and cast your line to catch those fish and enjoy your adventure!

Specialized Clothes For Fly Fishing Enthusiasts

Clothes designed for fly-fishing are different from those meant for hunting or camping. Clothing for the use of anglers is designed keeping in mind the fact that they spend time in water as well as on land. There are special items of clothing required for fly-fishing; these include waders, rain gear, a fishing vest, underwear, gloves, polarized sunglasses and a hat.

Hip or chest waders are an indispensable item required for fly-fishing. Hip waders may be used while fly-fishing in small streams, but chest waders that reach above the waist can be used for all types of fishing conditions. Two types of chest waders are available, namely, boot-foot waders and stocking-foot waders. The boot is an important part of the boot-foot wader. Many anglers prefer to use stocking-foot chest waders made up of neoprene, which need a separate pair of wading shoes.

Another essential item of fly-fishing clothing is a fishing vest. The fishing vest typically will have a number of large pockets to hold all the supplies that the angler would require for his fishing trip. One would not want to leave the water each time something is required. A good vest with Velcro fasteners is ideal because it allows quick and easy access to the tools and closes securely.

A rain suit of good quality material is another necessity for those practicing fly-fishing. To avoid perspiration on the inside of the rainwear, it should be manufactured with materials that breathe. The rainwear should close securely round the neck and wrists. The jacket of the rainwear should also have a hood.

Full-length underwear must be worn under the waders if you go fly-fishing. The underwear will prevent heat loss from the body if you stand in the cold water for numerous hours. Woolen underwear is the best choice. Other options for socks and underwear are Durofold. This material is a blend of wool, cotton and polypropylene.

A good pair of polarized sunglasses is an essential item of fly-fishing gear. The sunglasses reduce the glare of the sun and make it easier to see in the water. Gloves will help to keep the hands and fingers warm. However, wearing gloves will dull the sensitivity in the fingers. In fly-fishing, it is crucial to have full sensitivity to the fingers. To avoid the problem posed by wearing gloves, fly fishing gloves are designed to leave the tip of the fingers from the last joint, free for movement.

A wide brimmed hat will keep the sun off the face and protect the back of the neck and ears. The hat also protects the fly fisherman from being hit by hooks if a bad cast of the line or a strong gust of wind carries the fly towards the face or head.

The correct fly-fishing clothing gear will keep the angler dry, warm and safe. It adds to the comfort level and thus helps to enjoy the sport.

The History Of Fly Fishing

Fly fishing has been in existence since ancient times but the first recorded reference of the use of artificial flies appeared at the end of the 2nd century. A Roman by the name of Claudius Aelianus wrote about Macedonian anglers on the Astraeus River who snared fish with artificial flies. He described the flies as being made from red wool and cock feathers attached to a hook. The rods and the string they used were 6 feet in length and they were quite successful in catching fish. All through the years, people have been enjoying fly fishing as well as writing about it.

Fly fishing in the modern times originated in the streams of Northern England and Scotland. Not much was written about it until 1496 when the 'The Treatyse on Fysshynge with an Angle' was published by Dame Juliana Berners. The book contains instructions to make rods, line and hooks used in fly fishing. She also described dressings for different flies used at various times of the year. The patterns for the fishing fly that she described are still in use today and anglers believe them to be effective for successful fly fishing. The popular patterns include the Woolly Worm, the Black Gnat, the Whirling Dun and the Stonefly.

Dame Juliana also described the rods used at the time. The rods were about 18 feet in length and were made of very flexible wood. The lines were shorter than those used today and were made of hand-braided horsehair. The line was tied to the tip of the rod and a general rule at that time was that it should not be longer than the rod.

Izaak Walton published his book 'Compleat Angler' with the first detailed writings about fly fishing. In fact, the two chapters were actually written by his friend Charles Cotton. The rods and flies described in the book were akin to those described by Dame Juliana. The description of the lines was slightly different in that the lines were about 6 feet longer than the ones used in the 1400's, although they were still made from horsehair. The book also described the tapered lines and this was considered to be the first written description of tapered lines.

Fishing line manufacturers began mixing silk with horsehair to make the fishing lines in early 1800. The first silk line was made during the Civil War. The silk lines had an oily coating that made them water resistant. After the invention of silk fishing lines, horsehair was never used, although horsehair lines could be found sometimes in England up to the Second World War. However, after the first nylon line was manufactured in 1948, most manufacturers started using synthetic materials for the fly fishing line. The technological advancement and precision engineering helped create an automatically tapered line in 1952.

Top Fly Fishing Spots In The World

A fishing adventure provides the much-needed peace in the hustle and bustle of daily life. Fly fishing takes you into nature's lap and helps you relax and rejuvenate. Location for a trip is never a problem, nature has gifted us many water bodies and fly-fishing can be undertaken in any of them, be it the river, stream or the bay. Following are some of the well-known locations for fly fishing:

1. Chalk Streams of Hampshire, England:

The modern fly fishing began at the chalk streams of Hampshire. This is the place where Izaak Walton, author of 'The Compleat Angler' practiced fly fishing. Even today, the English continue to undertake fly-fishing in the chalk streams, but since these streams are situated on privately owned and managed land, access to the streams is scheduled. Fly fishing in the chalk streams will give you the authentic English fishing experience.

2. Labrador, Canada:

The rivers in Labrador in the eastern region of Canada are home to the native brook trout. The brook trout found in Labrador typically weigh from 3 to more than 8 pounds and are rarely ever seen in the United States.

3. North and South Islands of New Zealand:

New Zealand is known for the beautiful topography and is a great fly fishing destination. The rainbow trout and the brown trout are found in abundance in the clear waters of the islands. New Zealand is considered as the Mecca of trout fishing as it provides great fly fishing opportunities to anglers. New Zealand is in the southern hemisphere so it has the opposite seasons as compared to United States. One can therefore, have the best of both worlds, so to say.

4. Patagonia, Argentina:

This location is again in the southern hemisphere, so it is a reverse season fly fishing location. The rivers in Argentina are the natural habitat of brown trout, brook trout and rainbow trout. Sea-run brown trout known to be the largest trout in the world is found in the Rio Grande River at Tierra del Fuego.

5. Belize:

Belize is a well-known saltwater fly fishing destination. One can catch bonefish, tarpon and permit at the same time. You can also enjoy scuba diving or relax on a beautiful beach. Belize offers a variety of activities and can be a dream vacation for the whole family.

6. Christmas Island, Kiribati:

Christmas Island is a saltwater fly fishing destination and is very popular with vacationers. Its shallow flats provide the best bonefish fishing opportunities.

7. Alaska:

Alaska is a beautiful place and one could say it is the best of Mother Nature's gift to us. The waters in Alaska are chilly but full of rainbow trout, salmon and a variety of other prized fish. It is therefore a preferred destination for fly fishing in America.

The locations given above are only some of the fly fishing spots that are popular and well known. There are a number of other fly fishing destinations all around the world and the choice is dependent on your budget and the type of fly fishing you enjoy.

Used Fly Fishing Equipment

Fly fishing is fast becoming a popular sport and many people are now becoming interested in it in a big way. Fly fishing is not just baiting a hook with a worm and waiting for that little nudge on the fishing line, it is a challenging sport and an enjoyable adventure. In fly fishing the angler will attach an artificial fly to the line and cast it in such a way that it will remain on the water's surface, so that the fish will believe it to be an edible insect and bite the hook. Once the fish bites the hook, with the help of a landing net, it is drawn out and brought to land.

The fly fishing sport needs specialized equipment and purchasing a new set can be quite expensive, especially if the individual is a beginner and not too sure of continuing with the sport. Therefore, many anglers opt to procure used fly fishing equipment that works out to be less expensive than the new gear. While some anglers do not really care what the equipment looks like and are more interested in the action in the water, there are others who take great pride in the type of equipment they use for fly fishing. There are two types of fly fishing to select from, namely, dry fly fishing and nymph fly fishing. Used fly fishing equipment works for both the methods. In the dry fly fishing method, the fly is on the surface of the water, whereas in nymph fly fishing, the artificial eggs resemble the eggs laid and ready to hatch, below the water's surface. The angler is not able to see the activity going on under water and therefore this type of fly fishing is slightly more challenging.

Buying used fly fishing equipment is a great way to perfect the technique of fly fishing with limited expense. Later on when the beginner becomes a professional, he can purchase expensive high quality equipment and enjoy the pleasures of fly fishing. It is possible to find sparingly used fly fishing equipment online or in the local area. Many stores also deal in used fishing equipment and one can always physically check out the gear on offer. This is the best way to decide what kind of equipment suits you and whether you are comfortable with it. A beginner will be overwhelmed with the numerous options available in fishing rods. Graphite rods are the most popular but some anglers prefer fiberglass. It all depends on how comfortable you are with the fishing gear and how well it suits your style of fly fishing.

Fly fishing is a great sporting activity and many people enjoy it too. It needs a lot of practice for perfecting the skills but it is well worth the effort. Opting for used fly fishing equipment reduces the expenses and doubles the pleasures of the sport.

The Mysterious Allure Of Fly Fishing

There's more to the joy of fishing than simply picking a lure to get a camp-supper main ingredient and fly-fishing being a specialized sport, has men and women of all ages falling hook, line and sinker for the sheer thrill of learning the precision of casting the perfect line!

For many people new to the hobby of fishing, the high is to catch a fish, but for the true fly-fisherman, it's more than simply casting a simple lure to bait a fish – it's the joy of being in the outdoors, wading nearly waist-deep in water and learning to build up focus, precision and direct all energy to casting an almost non-existent (since it is so lightweight) lure to his favored fish across 30-40feet!

Not only does this require immense patience and perseverance to master directing the throw of the line-bait, but also a certain amount of ingenuity in perfecting the art of fly fishing so that the net-profit is one of the highs but the pleasure of the hobby is what keeps fly-fishermen going in for more than one crack-of-dawn trip.

The essential difference in other kinds of fishing is the importance of the lure, which is so lightweight in fly-fishing that it hardly gives it any direction, so it's only the expertise of the fisherman that can sink the line-weight of up to 40 feet of line on the waters, lacking momentum – and depending only on precision! Thus, fly-fishing is a unique sport that calls for oodles of patience, practice and delicacy of touch that can command precision movement at the flick of a wrist and the swing of an arm to cast the perfect fly-fishing line.

Besides best fishing techniques, those interested in this specialized outdoor sport, fly fishermen also need to educate themselves about the various kinds of insects that their favorite fish live on; knowledge of the fish's freshwater habitats, background of fly-fishing clubs and events besides learning how to tie-flies and make their own baits is important to the sport of fly-fishing too. At times, there are many fishing charters and hobby clubs besides websites and publications that give information on everything a novice fly-fisherman needs to know about the life-cycles of the insects the fish feed on to going for night-fly-fishing trips that are useful tips for any newbie – so absorb these avidly to be the angler you dream of being!

For those with more than a passing interest in fly fishing, the learning to adapt their personal rhythm to that of their rod-weight and line so they are one with the elements of nature and can transfer personal energies into the sense of the water-world around them, is very important to appreciating the splendor of natural settings that fly-fishing spots typically are!

True fly fishermen care about fish as much as taking care of the environment; thus, the elements of discipline combined with a sense of natural freedom constitutes the mysterious allure of fly fishing while being one with nature.

Canadian Fly Fishing Equipment

Who wouldn't want to experience the flowing streams and splendid mountains of picturesque Canada? It is the best place for anglers because Canada's cool lakes are the habitat of several of the finest fish that many anglers hunt for. The different kinds of fish living in Canada's great waters consist of redfish, halibut mackerel, salmon, tuna, and shellfish. Many of these fish are sought after by a lot of anglers because such great fish are trophies for these anglers. For fishing fanatics, serving such magnificent fish on the picnic table to their friends and family is one of their pride and joy.

Make the fishing experience unforgettable with Canadian fly fishing equipment. In order to catch the marvelous fish, the angler needs to be ready with the most vital fishing equipment during the fishing trip. Make sure that the equipment you are buying is right size for you. When selecting a fly fishing rod, you have to consider your height and size. If you are tall, a four-foot rod may create problems for you. If you choose the right size and height, then things will be comfortable for you. There are rods made for fly-fishing and usually come in different lengths to accommodate different anglers' heights.

Artificial flies and nymphs, equipment used in Canadian fly fishing, are another thing to consider. Either baits work efficiently; it is just the case of personal preference for different anglers. Some are more accustomed to using artificial flies than nymphs. However, there are a lot of anglers who are more successful using both techniques. The artificial fly works by having the bait stand just on top of the water. Since the fly looks like an enticing meal to the fish, it takes on the bait. The nymphs, in contrast, appear like eggs in the water waiting for the hungry fish to bite them.

If flies and nymphs are not your type of lures for Canadian fly fishing equipment, then you have the option of buying plastic worms, jigs, or grubs. Many anglers select plastic worms when they go to Canada to fish. These worms attract big fish because they look so authentic that the fish mistake it for the real thing. If you want that big fish caught, then don't hesitate to try luring them with the plastic worm! Alternatively, use the grubs in clear water and see for yourself the wonderful outcome. Grubs are excellent for larger fish; these lures are clearly visible and the fish love to bite them. Jigs are great in murky waters that have low visibility.

Life vests are a must for every fishing expedition. The Canadian waters, however calm some may look, can be dangerous to anyone without taking safety precautions. One cannot be too sure that an accident will not happen. Life jackets have saved millions of lives. It is advised that every precaution must be taken to guarantee the safety of the entire family and the other members of the fishing trip. Most outfitters or boating companies will provide life jackets for those who haven't got their own.

So, do not wait for tomorrow to buy your very own Canadian fly fishing equipment! Enjoy Canada and its wonderful waters.

Fly Fishing Equipment Guide

If you have heard of fly-fishing and you do not know what it is, it is a style angling that has a history tracing back to the ancient times. Fly fishing has a big difference from the fishing style we are used today which uses a reel and a rod, the fly-fisherman goes into the water and lures the fish to bite using his expert skills. The main difference of fly-fishing from the fishing style we are used to is the bait and method being used by the angler and also the fly fishing equipment.

Although fly fishing equipment has a reel and a rod it works differently from the usual open spool reels. Fly rods are made up of fiber glass or other complex materials and are flexible and light. Before catching a fish or purchasing your fly fishing equipment you must know the type of the fish you are going to catch because fly rods have different lengths. Usually a fly angler catches a salmon or a trout but it can also be an effective way of catching other types of fish.

Another distinctive feature that a fly rod has is the kind of fishing line which is usually thicker comparing it to any other kind of angling line.

Fly rod is not just an important fly fishing equipment but the weight, type and color of the artificial fly is also a part of the art of angling for a fly fisherman. There are various categories of flies they are partially submerged flies, surface floating flies and below surface flies each has its own particular way of casting.

Fly fishing equipment usually can be costly but not all the parts are expensive the most expensive part is the flying rod, flies and flying line are not. For people who are experienced in fly fishing they can eventually make their own flies to use. When you make your own fly you can customize it and most of all you can save a lot of money. If you want to experience how it feels to do fly fishing the best method to do it is with the help of an expert and he can also give you complete details regarding fly fishing equipment.

If you are the kind of person that loves adventure, likes doing things differently fly fishing is one great activity to be involved in. Somehow fly fishing is an "antique technique" that has been handed down from generation to generation. Fly fishing is a leisure that can last forever with the correct knowledge and equipment.

Finding Your Ultimate Fly Fishing Store

If you are planning to buy a pair of shoes where will you head, of course to a shoe store. How about for milk you will not go to a bank would you, rather you go to a grocery. Same when you want to buy jewelry you will not go to a dollar store but to a jewelry shop. This is not different when it comes to buying your needs for a fly fishing trip.

Beginners might say that it is boring to go to a fly fishing store but in reality it is a lot of fun.
